Unless closely the harmless fan usually carried by the Chinaman, but in a moment the blade can be drawn from its fan-like sheath and forms these weapons that CHU ACHUN killed TANG Akwan, for which crime he was tried on It is a matter deeply to be regretted that the · Court did not seize the opportunity of markof the use of the knife generally. The judges a comfortable doctrino. of the Supreme Court of Hongkong and also of the Supreme Court of China and Japan in strongly adverse terms on the carrying of revolvers by Europeans, but Mr. Snowden at the trial on Thursday appeared to assume was a perfectly natural, if not a proper, thing | Capella that the prisoner should have about him "accidentally," as his Lordship put it, a weapon designed solely for the purpose of stabbing. Roscon in his work on Criminal Evidence says :- "In considering the question of malice where death has ensued after provocation given by the deceased in assaulting the prisoner, or upon other provocation, especial attention is to be paid to the nature of the weapon with which death was inflicted If it was one likely to produce that result as used by the prisoner he will be presumed to have used it with the intention of killing, of the Haklayt Society." Those latters have question. I was then in charge of the watch and which will be evidence of malice; if, on the appeared in the columns of the Japan Guestie, heard the captain complain about the bad steercontrary, it was a weapon not likely to produce death, or calculated to give a severe wound, that presumption will be wanting." This issue was never distinctly placed before the jury in the case we are now considering the weapon was not even handed to them for their personal examination. It is not by any means a pleasant task to assail the legal as Mr. Snowden, nor to question the verdict of a jury, but in the interests of the public Thursday is, in several important aspects, open to grave objection. As we have said, the issue raised by the nature of the weapon was not placed before the jury, but there can be little doubt that, it was upon this issue that two of the jurors felt it their duty to find the prisoner guilty of murder, and Steamboat Springs Canal Company, are very while the other-five, not having been instructed as to the law on the point not unnaturally, probably, were only too glad to have an opportunity of escaping from an unpleasant task. It was ingeniously argued | their agent was quickly on the ground and had by the counsel for the defence that made a careful examination of the route, digging there was no evidence as to whether the the ground, and then made out the bill which dagger belonged to the deceased or the pri- captured the job." soner, and that it was just as likely to have been produced by the former as the latter. The prisoner's own statement was that the deceased drew the knife and he (the prisoner) succeeded in wresting it from him. Apart, however, from the almost absolute impossibility of a man unaided taking such a weapon from another, without, at all events, himself receiving very severe wounds in doing so there was the evidence of the widow that no such weapon was ever in her husband's possession. It is true that no one saw it in the prisoner's hand, but as it bore all the outward appearance of a fan such as every

Chinaman carries it would very naturally escape the notice of anyone who saw the man. The only evidence the prisoner could adduce in support of his statement that he took the dagger from the deceased was a shadow of a doubt that the dagger was in possession of the prisoner from the commoncement of the affiny, and in the remarks. sentoncing him he apparently assumed that this point was conclusively proved, "but," he said, "there was no actual evidence" whether he got it on purpose to stab him the deceased) or not and therefore it might be presumed that he had it about him accidentally." It seems rather a long stretch of charity to assume that a man should have about him by accident a weapon whose only use is to wound and kill. Moreover, what becomes of the doctrine laid down by Roscoe, that the use of a weapon calculated to cause death must be taken as evidence of inalice? His Lardship said "He thought the jury had taken a very merciful, but at the same time a very just, view of the case." The exercise of mercy, however, is not a prerogative of the jury, but of the judge, or, in cases of murder, of the supreme authority. This case of CHU ing I was in company with Captain Hyde, of the ACHUN might have been one for the exercise of mercy on the part of the Governor when a curiosity shop. A Chinaman suddenly fell the death warrant was presented to him for against me. I then saw his hand being withsignature, but the jury had certainly no right to let any consideration of mercy influence at the man and seized hold of him. The 17 them in coming to a decision on the facts; prisoner is that man.
